Expressions

SSF, and It’s Identity

Rodney D. Coates
Miami University

Received September 2012; Accepted December 2012

SSF is neither a person nor an entity, but an idea and a dream.
It is neither an event nor a moment, but a process and a praxis.
The dream is not tied to a person or a place, rather it resides in the spirit of freedom.

The quest of SSF is neither linked to this specific group nor to that specific purpose, rather it lingers in the eternal plans of possibilities where only dreamers dare go.
It is the essence of our hopes, the persistence of our determinations, and the deliberateness of our persistence which charts our course.

When long after the glint in our eyes has lost its glamor, long after our resolve has been broken long after our fervor is a distant memory - those who pick up the baton, those who hear the clarion call of justice, those who yet march to a distant drummers' beat - they will live on - nourished by the dreams we this day dream.

Rodney D. Coates is a public sociologists who utilizes poetry, photographs, editorials and other creative forms to promote social justice and human rights. He is the past recipient of Sociologists without Borders Said Award for poetry and social justice.